When I worked with Liz she accomplished every task with a minimum of guidance in the face of a herculean learning curve. Her approach was always professional in spite of frustrations caused by forces of the business world. In short, she was the consummate professional.

I can only say positive things about Liz's performance as an employee. She managed our publication database team, which was a large and very exacting undertaking. She was responsible for gathering media kits from publications throughout the US and Canada, and insuring that all the mechanical specifications for those publications were properly entered into our master database. She had two people reporting to her in the US, and also a team of data entry people in India working on her publication database entries. Liz's knowledge and understanding of the technical requirements that make for good graphic files is excellent, and many times she has needed to contact publications for clarification, when their spec sheets were too ambiguous. She also maintained meticulous records to keep track of the progress made with the spec entry for each of the thousands of publications entered, and made sure that each title would be reviewed again for updates and changes twice a year. Hence, Liz Cameron is very knowledgeable of the print industry, extremely organized and dependable, and most of all, she is just a very nice person. Therefore, I can highly recommend Liz Cameron for any position to which she may apply.

Liz and I worked together when the Indian team catered to US back office requirements. Liz worked very closely with me and various other personnel at different levels in my team to ensure she received precisely what was needed. Her ability to develop and manage a process and effectively communicate stands out! I'm sure that the training material Liz put together for the team are still looked up on the company intranet - great presentation, simple to understand and use. Liz is a great asset to any team.
